

Moisés J. Schwartz

Moisés J. Schwartz is the Manager of the Institutions for Development Sector of the Inter-American Development Bank (IDB). Previously, he served as the Regional Economic Advisor for the IDB Caribbean Country Department.

Before coming to the IDB in early 2017, he was Director of the Independent Evaluation Office at the International Monetary Fund (IMF) for seven years. Prior to that, he was President of the National Commission for Retirement Savings in Mexico.

Between 2004 and 2006 he served as an Executive Director at the IMF, representing Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Mexico, Nicaragua, Spain, and Venezuela. Previously, he held several senior positions in Mexico's public administration, including serving as the Finance Minister's Chief of Staff and Director General of International Financial Affairs within the Ministry of Finance.

He has also served as Director of Macroeconomic Analysis and Director of Economic Studies at the Bank of Mexico. He earned a bachelor's degree in economics from the Instituto Tecnológico Autónomo de México and a PhD in economics from the University of California, Los Angeles. He has written numerous articles on economic policy, evaluation, and pensions.